SA 8000, its beginning

The standard Requirements SA8000 was launched in 1997 by CEPAA - Council on Economics Priorities Accreditation Agency, an NGO, later renamed to SAI - Social Accountability International. Social Accountability 8000 (SA8000) is the first global standard for corporate social responsibility. SA8000 is based on both international human rights' conventions (International Labour Organisation, the International Declaration of Human Rights and the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child) and satisfying relevant local legislation. It aims to guarantee basic rights of workers involved in the production processes

9 main requirements of the standard

1. Child labour is not permitted
2. Forced labour is not permitted
3. Health and safety have to be assured
4. Freedom to organise and collective bargaining have to be guaranteed
5. Discrimination is not permitted
6. Disciplinary practices are not permitted
7. Working hours shall not exceed 48 hrs a week, with a maximum of 12 hrs overtime
8. Remuneration shall be sufficient
9. Management systems shall guarantee that the requirements are effectively satisfied

How Companies can implement SA8000

1. Certification to SA8000
2. Involvement in the Corporate Involvement Program (CIP)

Certification to SA8000

Companies that operate production facilities can seek to have individual facilities certified to SA8000 through audits by one of the accredited certification bodies. Since the SA8000 system became fully operational in 1998, there are certified facilities in 30 countries on five continents and across 22 industries.

Involvement in the Corporate Involvement Program (CIP)

Companies that focus on selling goods or that combine production and selling can join the SA8000 Corporate Involvement Program. The CIP is a two-level program that helps companies evaluate SA8000, implement the standard, and report publicly on implementation progress.

SA8000 Explorer (CIP Level One): Evaluate SA8000 as an ethical sourcing tool via pilot audits

SA8000 Signatory (CIP Level Two):

Implement SA8000 over time in some or all of the supply chain through certification. Communicate implementation progress to stakeholders via SAI-verified public reporting

Benefits of implementing SA 8000

Benefits for business

Putting company values into action

Enhancing company and brand reputation

Improving employee recruitment, retention and performance

Better supply chain management and performance

Benefits for Consumers and Investors
